

Autumn Light: A Season of Fire and Farewells

A Novel by Nicholas Sparks

Synopsis

In the twilight of autumn, as the leaves turn vibrant hues of gold and crimson, a group of friends and family gather at a remote cabin in the Blue Ridge Mountains to say farewell to a beloved patriarch. Over the course of a long weekend, they share stories, laughter, and tears as they grapple with the inevitability of loss and the enduring power of love.

Among them are Avery Crosslin, a young woman haunted by a tragic past, and Miles Ryan, a widower who finds solace in the solitude of the mountains. As they navigate their own personal journeys, Avery and Miles find solace and unexpected connection in each other's company.

But the tranquility of their retreat is shattered when a sudden snowstorm traps them and forces them to confront their deepest fears and long-held secrets. As the storm rages outside, the bonds between them are tested to the limit, and they must find a way to find hope and healing amidst the chaos.
