In her groundbreaking choreopoem, For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When The Rainbow Is Enuf, Ntozake Shange gives voice to the experiences of seven women of color who have struggled with depression, suicide, and the challenges of being a woman of color in America.

Through a series of powerful and moving poems, Shange explores the complex emotions of these women, from their pain and despair to their resilience and strength. The women in the poem are all different, but they are all united by their shared experiences of oppression and marginalization.

Shange's writing is both beautiful and heartbreaking, and it offers a powerful indictment of the racism and sexism that these women have faced. However, the poem is also a celebration of the women's strength and resilience. Despite the challenges they have faced, they have found ways to survive and thrive.

For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When The Rainbow Is Enuf is a must-read for anyone who has ever struggled with depression, suicide, or the challenges of being a woman of color in America. It is a powerful and moving exploration of the lives of these women, and it offers a message of hope and healing.
