

The Incredible Nellie Bly: A Pioneering Journalist and Trailblazing Daredevil

Nellie Bly was a pioneering journalist and trailblazing daredevil who made her mark on the world in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. She was the first female reporter to go undercover to investigate a mental institution, and her subsequent exposé helped to bring about much-needed reforms. She also made headlines for her record-breaking trip around the world, which she completed in just 72 days.

Bly was born Elizabeth Jane Cochrane in Cochran Mills, Pennsylvania, in 1864. She began her career as a journalist in 1880, when she wrote a letter to the editor of the Pittsburgh Dispatch complaining about the treatment of women in the workplace. The editor was so impressed with her writing that he offered her a job, and she quickly became one of the most popular reporters in the city.

In 1887, Bly was hired by the New York World to go undercover at the Women's Lunatic Asylum on Blackwell's Island (now Roosevelt Island). She pretended to be a mentally ill woman and was admitted to the asylum, where she spent ten days living among the patients. Her subsequent exposé, "Ten Days in a Mad-House," was a scathing indictment of the asylum's conditions, and it helped to bring about much-needed reforms.

In 1889, Bly embarked on a record-breaking trip around the world, which she completed in just 72 days. She traveled by train, ship, and donkey, and she wrote a series of articles about her experiences for the New York World. Her trip was a major publicity stunt, and it helped to make her a household name.

Bly continued to work as a journalist until her death in 1922. She was a pioneer in her field, and she helped to pave the way for women in journalism. She was also a fearless daredevil, and her record-breaking trip around the world is still a source of inspiration today.

The Incredible Nellie Bly: A Trailblazer for Women
